Mrs. Abraham Fleming, 581 Grosvenor Avenue, took place at Shaare Hashomayim Synagogue, on February 1, at six o'clock. Rabbi Wilfred Shuchat officiated, assisted by Rabbi M. S. Cohen. The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Israel Lewis, of Boston, Mass. She wore a gown of white, delustered satin, cut with a fitted bodice which had a portrait neckline; and three-quarter-length sleeves; and a full skirt appliqued with Alencon lace, with a slight train. Her veil of tulle illusion was combined with a matching headpiece; and she carried a cascade of Sweetheart roses and stephanotis. Miss Carolyn Weiss was maid of honour for her cousin, wearing a gown of mauve-pink satin, fashioned with a fitted bodice; and a bell-shaped skirt; also a matching hat; and carried a nosegay of pink and white carnations. Stephen Fleming acted as best man for his brother. The ushers were: David Fleming, a brother; Samuel Cornfield, Eleazer Gelber, Sydney Hinson, Gerry Naimen, Morton Schwartz, Paul Shinnoff, Gary Williams, Sydney Rubin, and Norman Goldberg. White chrysanthemums, pink gladioli, and dogwood formed the wedding decorations. Mrs. M. N. Finberg played the wedding music.

The question arose when Eichmann was in Budapest to order the evacuation of Hungarian Jews to Auschwitz and other execution camps, according to the documents. A telegram from one Veesenmayer, apparently a secretary of Eichmann, advised Berlin of Eichmann's "position" upon learning that Hitler had endorsed the proposed trade.

The text of the alleged telegram was reported to have said: "The Hungarian Jews who could figure in this are without exception biologically valuable material, many of them old Zionists whose emigration to Palestine would be undesirable on all counts. He (Eichmann) intends to report to the Reichsfuehrer SS (Himmler) and, if necessary, to ask the Fuehrer to reconsider."

The telegram then suggested that if further evacuation to death camps in Poland was approved, "this would be done in an accelerated fashion so that Jews designated for emigration would be transported out (of Hungary) even before the formalities are concluded."

With this in mind, the document indicated, Eichmann favored pressure on Hungarian authorities to reject a Swiss proposal that the Hungarian Jews who were to be exchanged be placed in special camps, says the New York Times. The exchange never took place.

The documents also indicated that Eichmann obtained approval for a rush evacuation of Hungarian Jews and moved 40,000 of them to death camps before Himmler ordered a halt in the mass execution program in the fall of 1944.

Other details of Eichmann's record and his responsibility in the slaughter of Jews were said to be contained in the documents. It was not clear to what extent they might duplicate or go beyond similar material already published about Eichmann.

According to Polish authorities, the original documents now in their possession were found in Poland after the war and are now being prepared for publication by the Commission for Investigating Hitlerite Crimes of the Ministry of Justice. They were described as memoranda and copies of messages exchanged between Berlin and field offices in Poland.

The Day The Water Stopped

BY SOL BARKIN, LAW DIRECTOR OF THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMUNITY

One problem Mr. and Mrs. Heinz Pol don't have in their Birch Groves home these days is dripping faucets. The reason is simple: their water supply has been cut off. The reason for that is infinitely more complicated but underlying it all is one principal facet: Mr. and Mrs. Pol are Jewish.

It happened on December 18, 1960, at four o'clock in the afternoon. Mrs. Pol, standing in her home in the pleasant semi-rural community of Birch Groves at Candlewood Lake, Connecticut, turned on the water tap. Nothing happened.

Mrs. Pol did not panic. She and her husband, a political reporter at the United Nations, who had been vacationing and week-ending in Birch Groves since the winter of 1956, had been expecting this. They did not bother to telephone the Birch Groves Association, which supplies water to the 88 home-owners of Birch Groves (including some half-dozens non-members of the association). Instead, they phoned their lawyer.

The Birch Groves Association had been using its control of a community water system to discourage Jews from residing in the area for some time. Pol, a survivor of Hitler Germany, had bought a home in Birch Groves only to discover that the Association: 1) would not accept him as a member, and 2) would supply him with water only if he paid higher rates than did the Association's members. (This last idea was particularly astonishing since the Pol house was permanently connected to the community water system and previous owners had always used it.) Nor, Mr. Pol discovered to his dismay, was he the first victim of this discriminatory policy.

Digging through the local records, Mr. Pol found out why. All the property in Birch Groves was subject to a restrictive covenant. The premises could not be used or occupied in any way by any person of Negro, Hebrew, or Jewish (sic) descent or extraction. Of course, such covenants have been unenforceable by state courts ever since 1947 when the United States Supreme Court so decided.

Mr. Pol refused to pay the discriminatory water rates. Despite the obvious intent of the Supreme Court's decisions, the Birch Groves Association decided to appeal to the Connecticut courts to declare judicially that the Association had the right to cut Pol's house from the community water system.

The suit was brought to trial before Judge Walter J. Sidor, of the Court of Common Pleas of Litchfield County. The Birch Groves Association asked Judge Sidor to make three declarations: First, that the Association was not obligated to supply Pol with water simply because he had bought a home in Birch Groves. Second, that the Association would be justified in discontinuing the supply of water to Pol. And third, if Pol was legally entitled to have the Association supply him with water, that the court should determine the rate to be charged.

On August 18, 1960, Judge Sidor made his ruling. He found for the Birch Groves Association, and against Heinz Pol. He said that Pol had no vested interest to be supplied with water by the Association, "this private corporation." The Association was free to refuse water to Pol entirely. And it could charge him at whatever rates it desired.

What about Supreme Court decisions that the state courts cannot enforce racially restrictive covenants? Judge Sidor took note of Pol's charge that he had been denied membership in the Association because he was a Jew and his reference to the Association's discriminatory by-laws. Judge Sidor went so far as to agree that "the restriction is un-American, illegal and void as a covenant restricting sale of land."

But Pol's claim of discrimination "is not sustained by the evidence presented in court." (Paradoxically, the judge refused to give Pol's attorney an opportunity to prove this claim by examining the Association's witness!) In any event, discrimination "in the sale of land is not involved in this case," and the United States Supreme Court rulings preventing the enforcement of racially restrictive covenants were not decisive, he said.

The real bone of contention in the Pol case, the court insisted in its strict interpretation, was whether the Birch Groves Association had the right to charge non-members higher rates for the use of water than it charged its own members. And, the court concluded, it did have this right.

There are unhappy practical consequences to this decision. By allowing the Association to deny (Continued on Page Eleven)

FUN WITH FIGURES . . .

If you're a mathematical genius, we need you. If you get regular workouts with your kids' homework, you can help us solve a problem.

We wanted to tell you how many people we'd played for in the last six months. Our drummer usually keeps a check on things like this, but we played some Chinese music once, and he was so busy reading the music he forgot his calculations.

But we do know that we've played for dozens of weddings, quite a few chapter dances, some charity balls, and countless private parties.

We'd like to add to the total by providing the entertainment at your next event — why not call us about it?

ized a program requiring $350,000 for the year 1961. Because of the need to assure personnel to carry out projects in all areas of Jewish cultural endeavor, authorization was made for the expenditure of $50,000 for graduate and post-doctoral fellowships, commencing in the fall. Dr. Judah J. Shapiro, secretary of the Foundation, said that full details of these fellowships would be announced shortly.

The report of the cultural agencies was presented by Arthur E. Gelber of Toronto, chairman of the committee on grants. Included were proposals for the preparation and the publication of scholarly works; the development of Jewish communal archives; and the granting of scholarships and fellowships on several levels. A special program will make available grants-in-aid to graduate students requiring financial assistance in order to complete their dissertations.

Reviewing the previous year's operations, Edwin Rosenberg, treasurer, reported that 21 communities had provided the necessary funds for the administration of the Foundation. Administrative costs seem to be assured for the next two years, he said, but substantial contributions and endowments would be required from individuals and foundations to realize the many significant projects approved by the executive committee. Mr. Rosenberg, as chairman of the finance committee, was authorized to take the necessary steps to acquire funds for the Foundation's program.

Julian Freeman, of Indianapolis, Indiana, presided at the meeting which was also attended by Dr. Sala Baron, noted historian of Columbia University; Michael Stavitsky, of Newark, N. J., chairman of the administrative committee; Mrs. Joseph Cohen, of New Orleans; Sol Satinsky, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Philip Bernstein, executive secretary of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds; Auren Kahn, administrative assistant of the Foundation.

The Soviet Union, which supported the original resolution, presumably will be asked what measures have been taken to combat the incitement against Jews in its own press.

One of the U. N.-circulated documents reveals that during 1959, in fifteen major central and provincial newspapers alone, at least seventy-seven articles appeared "which constituted virulent attacks on Judaism or on 'anti-social' individuals invariably bearing Jewish names or otherwise identified as Jews."

The document, submitted by the Co-ordinating Board of Jewish Organizations, holds that between one-fifth and one-third of all satirical articles in a number of provincial journals were of an anti-Jewish character, says the New York Herald Tribune. This is a partial listing of press and broadcasting headlines or titles cited to indicate the nature of the attack: "Swindlers Under the Mask of God's Servants," Radio Kirovograd, December 9, 1959, Kirovograd, Ukraine. "Sticky Hands," in "Vechni Rostov," August 17, 1959, Rostov, Ukraine. "The Secrets of the Minyan" (Jewish prayer quorum), in "Kivshak Pravda," July 20, 1959, Kiev, Ukraine.

The U. N. document points out that these articles and many others cite represent Jews as "sly, mean, slimy, unscrupulous, fraudulent liars, cheats, and thieves — traditional anti-Semitic stereotypes." Other articles cited relate Jews to disloyalty and in-veigh against Israel and Zionism. Many bring all these elements together.

The U. N. document also refers to verified instances of recent boogian outbreaks against Jews and relates this to the atmosphere generated by the press attacks. Here, in translation, are excerpts from typical press assaults. Some of the most severe have been received in New York since the publication of the U. N. documentation, says the New York Herald Tribune. From the Russian-language "Glas Rigi," published in Soviet Latvia on August 13, 1959, under the heading, "A Profitable Occupation":

spective buyers would hesitate a long time if they knew that water supply didn't come with the house.

The Association quickly took advantage of the court's ruling. Judge Sidor had determined, in a similar case tried together with the Pol one, that the water received was worth only $54 a year. But in October 1959, the Association sent Pol a bill for five years' assessments — for $480. And on November 21, another bill arrived adding a new item, a six per cent charge on the unpaid balance, equal to slightly over $60. This bill arrived with a threat: unless it was paid in full by December 15, the Pol home would be cut off from the community water.

That is why the Pols were not surprised when, three days later, Mrs. Pol tried the water tap — and nothing happened.

What are the Pols doing about their water situation? Luckily, they have an old surface well that supplies them with 300 gallons of water. This is not enough and besides, the water is not potable. So, until a measure of logic comes to Birch Groves, friendly neighbors, risking the displeasure of the Birch Groves Association, are helping the Pols out — with Association water!

Bat-Mitzvah, A Real Ceremony Or A Means To An End

BY CANTOR BEZALEL SILBERBERG, OF CONGREGATION SHAAKET ZEDOK, SAINT JOHN, N.B.

The subject of Bat-Mitzvah is one that is intriguing in that a great deal of consideration is now being given as to the possibility of erasing the stigma of second-class citizen where the feminine adherents of the Judaic faith are concerned. Many arguments have been tendered in regard to the feminine members and some statements have been made as to these members and their not being obliged to serve in any but lay capacities, while others have stated their vital necessity to the well-being of Judaism, since everything points to their horizon having brightened considerably.

This may be true, but the feelings of the writer have been that first, a means for educating the Hebrew sisterhood must be devised, and so far, one such design has been developed and fastened, this being the Bat-Mitzvah ceremony and its effect on Judaism in the North American hemisphere. Bat-Mitzvah is a relatively new custom and has been, for the past thirty-five years or more, taking on an aura of greater importance. This is a step in the right direction. Yet, something seems to be missing, and some kind of solution is necessary. Solutions have been flying fast and thick, one such solution being to bring the feminine adherent into the synagogue from childhood on, to educate it in Judaism.

A second step has been taken, which is that of offering to the girl the opportunity for proving herself a worthy member of the faith through her participation in a Bat-Mitzvah ceremony. The writer feels that what is missing in the education of the girl toward this particular goal, is the failure to give her a keener insight as to what she is doing and why Bat-Mitzvah seems so important in her life.

The writer is quite interested in this service since he feels that the feminine role in the Judaic way of life is of utmost importance, and that it should be granted some impetus, some motivation so as to cause the girl to give a great deal of serious attention and thought to her future. As is the case with all humanity, there has been a laxity in the training of our daughters toward a specific goal, Bat-Mitzvah being one of the targets of concentration. What the parent does and says is reflected in the child's attitude as well, with the result that very little is really accomplished, and the end reached renders the goal ineffectual.

It is up to the clergy, working with their board members, to take up the slack, get a stronger grip on the congregation, and educate it to the possibilities for adding, rather than just developing, something that is attractive and of momentary benefit. It is up to the congregation board to give of their utmost, where co-operation and willingness are concerned, so that the clergy could have a sound basis from which to work. Failure to do this is the bane of the clergy as well as the bane of the congregant, for there also seems to be a rather indifferent, and even reluctant, attitude on the part of the board to allow their clergy more leeway than they dare.

One rather superfluous contention on the part of the congregant is that his daughter isn't obliged to fulfill her duties toward her faith, since she has been exempt from the performance of many duties. This is also a failure on the part of our sages of old, who were short-sighted enough to ignore the status of the woman, so that there arose a rather complacent attitude on her part, resulting in Judaism's having suffered greatly because of this enforced complacency.

Another rather superfluous contention, this time on the part of the clergy, is that since this is more or less a way for bringing attendance to a higher par where the synagogue is concerned, it needn't be given too much attention, for whatever the girl is able to accomplish toward her performance in the ceremony is considered good enough. The writer's contention is that all this is a waste if there is no goal in mind. The girl must be instructed as to her role and status in Judaic circles, and must receive that education which is to make her a vital partner in Judaism. Her counterpart is no better off, for his object is to sever himself completely upon the completion of his ceremony, with the sole sentiment toward Judaic thought being that of giving condescendingly only token attention to his faith and obligations.

This needn't prevail in any case. The writer has always fostered the method of approach through the heart, that of educating the candidate as to the goal to be attained once the milestone of Bar-Bat-Mitzvah has been passed and, without relenting in any way, so that the result causes a life-long retention in the candidate's mind.

Another argument, tendered by the writer, is that more than just lip-service should be rendered in the course of a ceremonial education, if that is the goal Bat-Mitzvah is to attain, for it seems that lip-service has been the precise factor, rather than the goal, which is to be attained throughout the life of a girl who desires to be recognized as a young lady according to Judaic precepts. Ladyship is a great task in itself, and qualified personnel are to be entrusted with the duty of teaching the candidate in deed and action, so that embarrassment and ignorance as to just what her role is would never be encountered.

Still another argument is that of ritual. While some leaders hold that a reading of the Torah is unnecessary, the writer disagrees, for, again, we would be accomplishing nothing were the candidate to be trained to do nothing more than some form of simple service, designed for holding the attention of the attendants. Elaboration is of vital necessity and makes for greater desirability and meaning, even to the attendant who might not understand one word being said, but who would sit up and take notice of what is being done. The reading of the Torah is as necessary here as is the reading of the Haftarah to the Bar-Mitzvah candidate, for this is the means for the candidate's ability to prove himself or herself to the congregation. This is the heart of the test toward the goal to manhood or womanhood, and should be given the greatest and most scrupulous attention.

While the candidate performs before the congregation, she should be taught to know that she also performs before God when she reads the portion of the Torah, that it should serve as the incentive for her to better her outlook on a broader life, along with the idea that the broadening process is what will help in her development as a young lady.

Another important aspect is that everything suddenly begins to take on more meaning, so the duty of the clergy here is that as much should be inculcated into the mind of the girl in order for her to emerge with the mind of a woman. The practical side should be greatly emphasized so that the final result will be one which demands her consideration of the future on every possible plane and why.

The final argument is that the Bat-Mitzvah should not be considered as the means to an end, but as a ceremony that is real, that has meaning and tradition, for the clergy, the congregation, and the candidate, so that all of us, through our roles as judges of those who enter in our midst would also have the opportunity for learning the intention that is Judaism and in this manner, make a real effort to restore to the fold of the faith, those who have become lost because of ignorance or neglect.

Thus Judaism would be given that new lease on life that is so terribly necessary. Judaism has been struggling to exist because of the very little improvement that was attempted so as to give it a new vitality. The greater part of it must be re-examined and reformed so that in this process of re-examination and reformation, there will be found Judaism at its best, with the best it has to offer.

Canadian Jewish Congress Head Honoured On Seventieth Birthday

Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, was honoured on his seventieth birthday by a gathering of Canadian and world Jewish leaders at a dinner in the Queen Elizabeth Hotel. Telegrams and cables were received from all parts of the globe, and personal tributes were paid Mr. Bronfman by: Yassov Herzog, Israeli Ambassador to Canada; Sol Kamee, member of the board of the World Jewish Congress; Rene Cassin, president of the Alliance Israelite Universelle; Saul Hayes, national executive vice-president of the Canadian Jewish Congress; Allan Bronfman, Mr. Bronfman's brother; and Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president, of the World Jewish Congress.

Dr. Cassin was Minister of Justice in the De Gaulle government-in-exile during World War II, and is now professor of civil law at the Sorbonne; and of international law at The Hague Academy. It was the role he played as French representative on the UN's Human Rights Commission that earned him the title Father of the 1948 Declaration of Human Rights.

The Canadian Jewish Congress, which will name its new headquarters Samuel Bronfman House, said "the dedication of the building as Samuel Bronfman House will bear permanent testimony to Mr. Bronfman's unique position in the Canadian Jewish community. It will serve as a fitting tribute to mark his 70th birthday, thus giving expression to the admiration and appreciation that we all feel for his vigorous and devoted leadership over these many, many years."

Another message said: "In the great tradition of our biblical heritage it is appropriate that we salute him (Mr. Bronfman) in the full maturity of three score years and ten."

Michael Barrilay, of Israel, of the Keren Hayesod, presented a medal to Mr. Bronfman as a "small tribute of gratitude for the support and service" he has given for the upbuilding of the State of Israel.

Mr. Bronfman, born in Winnipeg, March 4, 1891, started his philanthropies with his work in 1929 in a fund campaign to build the Jewish General Hospital. In 1934 and 17 times since, he has headed the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of Montreal.

In 1936 and 1937 he helped to establish the McGill School of Commerce and contributed two permanent professorships to the University. In 1938 he created and headed the Canadian Jewish Refugee Committee and in 1939 convened a Canada-wide assembly of Jews to aid the war effort. The same year he was made president of the Canadian Jewish Congress.

In 1941, he commissioned the Stephen Leacock book, "Canada — The Foundations Of Its Future", and throughout the war, he served as a member of the National Research Council. In 1944, he became honorary president of the Zionist Organization of Canada, and in 1945 he attended the founding sessions of the United Nations in San Francisco.

In 1948, he received a doctorate from the University of Montreal, and the year previous, he was associated with a project that resulted in the settling of 1,185 war orphans in Canada. In 1951, he donated a chair of democratic business enterprise to Columbia University. In 1953 he became president of the Canada-Israel Securities, charged with the sale of State of Israel Bonds.

Since 1957, he has been a member of the Canada Council. He is also a member of the Board of Governors of the Canadian Welfare Council; associate member of the Canadian central council of the Red Cross Society; and a member of the Canadian general council of the Red Cross Society; and a member of the Canadian general council of the Boy Scout's Association.

U. N. LEADERS BELIEVE SOVIET AIMS

"The following words clearly resound in the uninhabited vacuum of the synagogue hall — profit, interest, bonus funds, account register. . . Goldberg was a most enterprising and resourceful man. Accustomed to the unpublished swindling of money donated by believers, he also tried to dip his hand in the government's treasury."

And it is clear that the press campaign is but one facet of an effort directed against Soviet Jews — as a group and individually — in other important areas, culture, religion, public life, and official institutions. This is documented in two U.N.-distributed papers submitted by the Co-ordinating Board of Jewish Organizations and the World Union for Progressive Judaism.

Against the Soviet Union's claims of complete religious and cultural equality for all its citizens, they assert that Jews, who are considered a nationality, have consistently been deprived of minimal spiritual and cultural privileges permitted other minorities.

On a base of centuries-old popular anti-Semitism in the Ukraine, White Russia, and other sections of the Soviet Union, the government has laid down an official line of discrimination, hostility, and distrust.

Why? Experts believe that Jews are regarded as an alien entity, indigestible in the monolithic Soviet framework, and, because of religious and family ties with Israel and the West, a potentially unreliable element, says the New York Herald Tribune. The Soviet aim appears to be to keep the Jews — through intimidation and the breeding of a hostile environment — in a totally isolated and atomized state.
